REPORT.

At the close of last year (1857) there were 278 patients in the House, in the very unequal distribution of sexes—122 males, 156 females. It was then considered that the maximum of accommodation for the women had been exceeded by six: we have however now an additional increase of nine, the report of to day being, 129 males, and 165 females.—Total 294.

There have been 17 admissions more than during last year, 3 fewer discharges, and 1 more death.

The report is favourable on the additional numbers, in regard to both discharges and deaths. As many as 10 women have been admitted in one week. There are five females to be discharged to-day; and one or two males perhaps before the end of the year: one of these convalescents is waiting at his own request, and with the laudable desire as he expresses it himself, “of being thoroughly furnished unto all good works,” before he goes.

When the Commissioners in Lunacy visited the House at the end of last month, they noticed the inconvenience of this feminine preponderance, which has only been met by turning two more of the single rooms into associated dormitories, a mode of adaptation which has now reached its limit. The class and character of the patients more recently admitted, have not been generally speaking of a curable class: many of them OLD patients, and long-standing cases. From their circumstances and habits they are compulsorily placed at the extremity of the Building, in what would (if we did not object to the word) bear the name of refractory ward, which becomes consequently objectionably crowded. To obviate this, which we fear can hardly be expressed as temporary inconvenience, the Commissioners suggested the propriety of refusing to receive any more female patients during the continuance of this over crowding, and even further, the advantage of keeping a number of reserve beds, yet considering the House as full. Till our attention was directed by the Commissioners, to the 53rd. clause of the 16th. and 17th. of Vict. we were not aware of this Legislative sanction: it has never yet been embraced by us, and no pauper patient has ever been refused admission. While the number of chronic, and in all human probability incurable patients, will at all times have a greater tendency to increase by fresh accessions, than diminish through deaths, it urges on us the propriety of considering the condition of any patients for whom future accommodation may be sought. This is an important point, which as far as we are aware, has not entered into consideration, in the recent discussions which have taken place, here, and in Parliamentary phrase, “elsewhere.” If more patients be admitted irrespective of their probably curable condition, the House may even after enlargement, become soon crowded with imbeciles and idiots. The removal which has been repeatedly suggested of the most harmless of such chronic cases, is not always practicable, and when they are occasionally sent home, their re-admission is sought and obtained on the ground of their being very dirty, which however inadequate a substitution for the single plea of insanity, at any rate has the effect of enhancing that one of the most prominent features of this House, its proverbial cleanliness, noticed by visitors, official and non-official. Patients so re-admitted are prone to catch idleness from any near them likely to impart the infection, consequently they become quarrelsome, and to borrow an expressive epithet from one insane reprover of another, they shew spontaneity of violence; “you should not be so spontaneously violent,” said one patient to another as he warded off an expected blow. The paramount object to secure is the admission of recent cases, that we may retain if possible, the character of this House as a hospital of cure.

Acting always upon the principle that the welfare of the community is the grand argument for individual exertion, it is satisfactory to find many feeble minded patients so willing and desirous even as they are, to enter into the field of competition with those of more energetic character and higher type of brain than themselves, and to know that they are preserved by doing so, from a state of melancholic stagnation.

It is of course desirable always to take certain peculiarities of the patients into account with regard to the selection of their employment, and to remember that many are typical characters, representatives of a class in which the best workers are often the most loquacious, incoherent, and eccentric; whose external peculiarities no more interfere with the admirable devotedness of their labours, than the humming does, with the labouriousness of the bee. We had a patient who was ceaselessly engaged, working industriously throughout the six days of the week, but resolutely determined to lie in bed on the seventh. He insisted on an elastic interpretation of his own devising, to which we were obliged to yield, to do the same on every alternate Friday; the commandment told him, he said, (and he was determined to obey it) to rest every Sunday and every committee day. There are again strong under-currents of feeling which sometimes manifest themselves with an intensity which would seem proportionate to the extent of other impressions apparently lost: we had to remove a picture which had been put up in the room of a female, who was the very personification of the grotesque sympathetic. The picture was of a boy taking physic; and whenever she saw it she burst into a flood of tears at the grimaces he made.

A great deal of domestic work has been done this year, and much out-door improvement effected. The farm-yard has been vastly improved and enlarged; additional sheds built for winter stores, &c. and a very nice iron balustraded verandah made on the female side, by an alteration of a dark and disagreeable old covered way. A great many more rooms have been papered and painted, an improvement which had added not only to the comfort of the patients, but to their more cleanly habits: they are more pleased with their rooms and take pride in keeping their neatness and cleanliness unsoiled. We hope, as the spring advances, to encourage the patients in the culture of flowers and plants; and to follow out a practice, very common in Germany, of making natural window curtains, by festoons of Italian ivy. When we are able to obtain additional work-shops, we hope to instruct some of the patients in useful and more ornamental pursuits, and in summing up our chief requirements now, we feel quite disposed to be satisfied in tracing our descent from a very low origin, and to leave it instanced only in the double demand of the descendants of the horse leech, "give give," and say, give us the means for improving our present accommodation, and give us land.

The spirit of emulation amongst the patients generally, has been excited in their late horticultural pursuits: the products including to their great delight an Australian gourd, we believe of unequalled dimensions; being twelve stone minus  $\frac{3}{4}$ lb. in weight, and seven feet in circumference. It was an outward and visible foretaste of an inward natural feast. The fellow to it, not quite so large, was made into a pie for the patients at the desire of the chief husbandman, who delayed his departure in order to partake of it, and after a residence of three years and a half, went home cured last week. This man had been TWICE re-admitted, and each time after an absence of exactly ten years. On being questioned as to the cause of his last admission, his reply was, that he flew into a passion when he was told that he must be sent again from principle. "When passion and principle are opposed to each other," said he, "there must be a battle, and I fought them: besides they called me names, and none of my family like to be called names, and are determined to be known only by numbers." His selected number was 601, and for a long time this was his recognized cognomen. Such biographical sketches, with these maniacal musings during recurrent attacks, occasionally recal both upon the part of the patients themselves and on our own, reciprocal remembrances of kindness. A woman was re-admitted a short time ago, after an absence of fourteen years, whose accuracy in the descriptive account of the hereditary transmission of her malady, was singularly gratifying. She came full of anger towards her relatives for keeping her at home a long time after her relapse. "They knew," were her words to us, "that my mother was insane, and my grandmother was insane, as they had been both in the Asylum, and they must have been good people or they never would have been sent there."

If memory is the most failing faculty in some, it is still most strangely retentive in others: this woman can talk of, or refer to occurrences and events long forgotten by her more sane associates: and we have an old inmate of the House, a resident of more than thirty years standing, who recollects the names of passing individuals with singular accuracy.

We had a painter in the House, whose occupation as a good workman, led to his continued engagements from house to house: he could neither read nor write, and never kept any account, but he knew all the work that he had done throughout the year for each of his employers, and dictated his annual bills with such exactitude that he never made a mistake of half a day either way.

The number of applicants for admission for patients whose condition is just above pauperism has been continued as usual; we have had as many as five in one week. It is certainly most desirable that the notice of the Legislature should be directed to this helpless and unrecognized class of patients. Their anomalous position has just and urgent claims which may well be pressed in the approaching Session, when very extensive and important alterations are expected to be made in the Lunacy laws. Independently of that questionable exercise of humanity which can sketch an order to the extent of declaring actual chargeability when it does not really exist, we believe the practice to be hazardous and dangerous, leading to treatment under disadvantage in the Asylum, and perhaps to the exhibition of vindictive feelings when removed from it. Whatever the motive may be, nothing justifies déception, and we can speak positively but painfully upon this point because we have felt (and it may be suffered from) its injustice. A patient is now in the House who declares that he was very much upset when he found that he had been deceived in this objectionable manner; and another, who lately left us, coupled his expressions of gratitude with the addition, "I was never in any proper position with you, I never was, or am ever likely to be chargeable to a parish."

It may be, as stated in justification, that such patients are better off, and that the little property they possess would soon be spent in the endeavour to obtain the desired relief, still while we are most feelingly alive to the truth that much valuable time, or indeed the most valuable time, may be occasionally lost, and parochial relief sought after unsuccessful efforts; our conviction is, that as all pauper patients are likely to be removed from private Asylums, so all private patients should be from those that are known only, and recognized only as pauper institutions. There is a sensitiveness which is almost morbid, on personal detention under almost any but the most violent proofs of insanity, and the subsequent and sometimes injudicious urgency for removal from those who make an indirect demand as themselves contributing towards the support of the patients, may not warp the judgment, but it tends to render its exercise perplexing. If a patient's relatives pay for his support they think they can remove him whenever they please, and call somewhat peremptorily for the sanction of medical authority to do so.

Without attempting any thing like a running commentary on the last report of the Commissioners in Lunacy, it may be remarked, that some of the objections raised by them against some parts of the Asylum, are not confined to the older portions of the Building, but extend to its later additions: the stone floors, the narrow windows, and the confined passages. We have removed a vast number of similar defects in the original Building, but if these improvements are to be continued and extended to the new parts, we have full employment in prospect. Experience of course would be of little worth if it were not suggestive of improvement. This House no doubt (like any palatial residence even) might be altered for the better, but it is very questionable, if every brick were taken down to-morrow, that a more comfortable abode for its inmates, or one upon the whole more conducive to their cure, could be built up in its stead. To correct its faulty structure, and to secure its permanent prosperity has been the object of what has been truly in connection with Asylum management, a very long life, and we may be permitted to say, that with the single exception of the suggested extension of the associated-dormitories in the upper story of the Buildings, we have hitherto been fortunate enough to anticipate every recommendation of the Commissioners in Lunacy.

We have still plenty of work on hand, and while real or supposed improvements are demanded, we are not likely to be idle. As it is very well known that the balance of reason can be overthrown by the want of regular occupation in conjunction with the neglect of the pursuit of moral habits, so the continued encouragement of these must tend to perpetuate that balance, and the establishment of them to restore it. To accomplish this is our object—that our discharged patients may go home not only as possessors of sense, but of such habits as will enable them to retain it.

Mind is nervously sensitive to the action of mind, under the influence of an overpowering law : and our daily intercourse with insane life has taught us, that if as possessors of clearer light, we yield a willing obedience to this law, we find it very seldom broken by those whose minds are under an eclipse. We have scarcely ever known what it was to have an individual or domestic trial without the bulk of the inmates sympathising with us ; and we increasingly feel upon our parts, that we never could dissociate ourselves from attachments to them, in all their wanderings, whether they shew themselves in the clamour and the clash of impulsive mania, or in that distressing melancholy from imaginary evils, which exhausts the sufferer by corroding care. The law of reciprocity is imperative, and on the correctness of the principles on which it is supported, we build the efficiency of our practice, a practice always having reference not merely to the health of the animal organization, but to the soul which gives it life.

JOHN KIRKMAN, M.D.

Commissioners' Report.

SUFFOLK COUNTY ASYLUM, 29th. November, 1858.

SINCE our last visit in July, 1857, 148 patients have been admitted, 93 have been discharged, and 45 have died. There are now in the Asylum 294 patients, of whom 130 are males and 164 females.

We have this day examined all the inmates, and gone over every part of the Asylum.

We found very little excitement among the patients, and the women were much less noisy and excited than on the occasion of our last inspection.

We find but few patients are registered as being under medical treatment for bodily illness. The names of six men and eight women appear in last week's report, but their bodily disorder is not stated, as required by the acts.

We beg to call attention to the fact that the medical journal is not in the form of the schedule.

One woman was in seclusion as we went into the wards, but she was let out while we were there.*

There was no mechanical restraint, which indeed is never resorted to in this Asylum.

The clothing we found good, and the bedding abundant and of good quality

There is nothing now to report in reference to the occupation and amusements of the patients.

The women appeared to employ themselves in various ways, but there seems to be a scarcity of employment for the men; and we think that if proper shops and tools were provided, a larger number of them might be advantageously and usefully occupied in tailoring, shoe-making, mat-making, the manufacture of cocoa-nut fibre matting, &c.

We notice, with pleasure, that various improvements have been effected since we were here; and that some of our recommendations have been carried out.

All the circular windows on the female side, and several on the male side, have been removed.

A portion of the single rooms has been boarded, and some of the boundary walls lowered.

* It may hardly be worth notice, but as an erroneous impression is conveyed by this clause, we trust the writer will be glad to see it corrected as the hasty dash of his pen: the patient was placed in her room, for disturbing him as he was writing, and let out again as he stood by. The seclusion was for three or four minutes at the longest, and ADOPTED, not removed, in consequence of this visit.

Birch bedsteads have, in many instances, been substituted for the old tub bedsteads; bed-side carpets are now used, and wash-stands are being gradually introduced.

We notice, besides, that a number of rooms have been papered and painted; six associated dormitories, for three patients in each, have been formed, by throwing two single rooms into one.

An improvement has also been made in the covered way on the female side.

We have now again to draw attention to those subjects which have not yet been attended to, and to express a hope that as little delay as possible will occur in carrying out the improvements which have been commenced.

Especially, we think, that the stone floors should be replaced by wood, for we noticed to-day that nearly all the flags were very damp, and that the rooms where they exist were not free from offensive odour.

The small windows also should be enlarged, and be so constructed as to admit more air.

A number of proper seats, with backs, should be supplied where now only forms are provided; and the day rooms with stone floors be partly covered with matting.

We find on inquiry that as many as ten or twelve patients are bathed in the same water; we think that the water should be changed more frequently, and that the supply of towels, brushes, combs, and looking-glasses should be increased considerably.

The wards on the women's side are now much crowded; and although as yet no patient has been refused admission, we think that it has become necessary to make further provision for the pauper lunatics of the county without delay.

We hope that when taken the subject into consideration, the Visitors will see the importance of providing accommodation also for the insane poor belonging to the boroughs of Ipswich and Bury St. Edmund's, either by uniting, or contracting, with the authorities of these boroughs.

In conclusion, we have again to report that the condition of the patients and their contented appearance show the continued care and good treatment they receive from Dr. and Mrs. Kirkman.

JAMES WILKES, } Commissioners in Lunacy.
